I teach 5 different Middle School classes. All are focused on work and life skills. This was a great, holiday themed resource. It was a little easy, for some of my students. But, it increases in difficulty and kept my students engaged. They enjoyed the holiday meal theme. I appreciate materials that are relevant to my students real life activities, along with being age appropriate.

Students used with

6th, 7th, 8th grades
Primarily students with mild to severe disabilities, that are emerging bilinguals/ ELS/ ESOLs/ ENLs, on the autism spectrum, and with learning difficulties

Students loved this. And it was a great way for us to talk about how Thanksgiving dinners look different for different families.

This resource was fun and creative! It was a little difficult for my students to navigate independently. My para and I provided a lot of support and prompting. But I love the idea and appreciate the time that went into making this activity!

I used this lesson in my life skills self contained class with my in person learners and was able to post on Schoology for my virtual students. I love that I can do both and it's not complicated.

Questions & Answers

Question November 21, 2020 from Stacey J.
This may be a silly question, but is this intended for the students to hear the question rather than see it with them remembering what they've heard to put in the missing picture? Or how have you used this? It looks awesome! Thanks!

Answer November 22, 2020 from Adulding Made Easy aka SpedAdulding (TPT Seller)
Hi Stacy,

This resource is serving food and they are supposed to look at the order and figure out what is missing from the plate. It's a pretty hard skill to remember word for word everything that was said, but I suppose you could use the activity that way for your higher level learners. (This resource does not include audio)

Question November 16, 2020 from maura H.
Hi! Is there a way to divide this great resource into sections of 20 or so pages.

Hi Maura,

Thank you for your purchase! I will have to reformat the activity and upload separate PDFs for each set of questions. I will work on this tonight when I get home from school and update the file, thank you for your patience!
